

Models That Work Award 1998

The US Department of Health Resources and Service Administration (HRSA) recognized The Healing Place of Louisville, Kentucky with the “Models That Work” award in 1998.

The Models That Work campaign and the awards program are meant to promote local programs that are "proven in the marketplace". The Campaign stresses the best use of resources, supports local control, emphasizes results over process and acts as a catalyst for local problem solving.

This is what HRSA said about The Healing Place:

“The Healing Place has taken programs of entitlement and turned them into programs of empowerment. Through the use of a diverse staff, community volunteers, and creative use of resources, THP has been able to deliver an effective program at a significantly lower cost than similar programs thus making the service available to more individuals in need. This model demonstrates the feasibility of a flexible, therapeutic, cost efficient model for dealing with difficult populations.”
